deep breath and then marched in a body to the speakers' table.

Mrs. John O. Miller, State chairman of the league, presided at the remarkable gathering. The fair voters were to say for themselves. It was "show-me" day, with the men on edge to conrince their auditors.

The crowd of women was so great that the start of the luncheon was delayed a half hour beyond the starting time fixed for 12:30. Then the luncheon began, with a vacant seat at the right of Mrs. Miller reserved for United Senator Pepper.

taff Correspondent Evening Public Ledger pysiaht, 1952, by Public Ledger Company Washington, March 10 .- The latest blow to the bonus schemers in the House, Controller Crissinger's statement that loans to soldiers were not fit assets for national banks, has left them groggy. Today they were indignant at President Harding and equally indignant at Chairman Fordney, of the House Ways and Means Committee. Some were for putting the bill through anyway in face of the President's opposition, modifying it so as to compel banks to make the loans in spite of Mr. Crissinger. And they would pass the bill over the President's veto. The more moderate favored waiting until Mr. Harding's return from his Southern outing and then putting the bill squarely up to him. And this course was likely to prevail. "This time." said one of the maicontents of the committee, "we'll send some one along with Joe Fordney to see what the President really does say. Probably Harding told Joe that he was against this bill when they last consulted together, but Joe forgot all about it on the way from the White House to the Capitol.

Fordney Doubtful Messenger Fordney has proved to be a good and bad messenger between the Capitol and the White House. Crissinger Steps In Into this muddle came the statement of Crissinger. Why does it make so much difference what Crissinger says? You must have been at Marion to answer that question.

Crissinger is the leading citizen of Marion. You "have been at Marion" as you walk along the streets of Wash. Ington. Some other leading citizen of Marion stops you like the ancient mar-iner. After the usual "hello, how" the old town since everybody has moved to Washington?" he draws close to you to Washington? he draws close to you and says in a most significant way. Keep your eye on Dick Crissinger.

With this solemn adjuration he moves on and is lost among the people of Washington who do not come from The House committee headed by Mr. The House committee headed by Mr. Fordney did not keep its eye on Dick Crissinger. Why should it? He has been lost, submerged, forgotten, since he came to Washington. But still he is the leading citizen of Marion. Before Mr. Harding was caught up into high place and made one of the rulers of the earth Dick was one of his two closest friends. A Harding Democrat, he did much to finance the Harding campaign and to make Marion a place to which crowds might come to see the which crowds might come to see the front porch. He is a lawyer and country banker. He is a lawyer and country banker, honest, simple, direct and with a perpectly clear mind. He knows the value for mortgage purposes of every acre of farm land in Central Ohio. Nothing showy about him, he is solid, conservative. Mr. Harding has sat on many boards of directors with him. And I suppose what he knows of banking he learned chiefly from Crissinger.

I should say that the President would be powerfully impressed by what Mr. Mellon says about finances, which is not much, for the Secretary of the Treasury is one of the shyest and most silent men. I was at the house of the delegation from the Far Eastern re-public recently. As soon as he heard that I was there one of the delegates got into the bathtub and stayed there all the evening so as not to have to meet me. Mr. Mellon is not so shy as this

Siberian, but he is the next most shy man in Washington. The story is that at a Cabinet meet-ing recently the President turned to Mr. Mellon, who was maintaining his usual silence, and asked, "Weil, what has silence, and asked, "Weil, what has the sphinx to say about it?" There was no bathtub to get into so Mr. Mellon delivered himself of this: "I think, Mr. President, that there are two sides
